

THE RETURN OF THE SNOW FENCE

Drivers in Lambton County may be noticing a few more snow fences along county roads, like this one on Oil Heritage Road near Aberfeldy Line. It's part of a concerted effort to improve roads in the area. See story on pg 2.

Petrolia teacher facing sex charges

Heather Wright
The Independent

A Petrolia teacher is facing four sex charges. The Independent has learned three charges of sexual exploitation and one charge of sexual assault have been laid in incidents which took place during the summer. Sources say alleged incidents were not connected to any school activities. A publication ban has been placed on the name of the victim and anything which might identify him. Sexual exploitation charges are laid when a person is a position of trust or authority to a minor according to the Criminal Code. Gillian Boere's case was in court Monday. Her next appearance is scheduled for March. She has not yet entered a plea. The Lambton-Kent District School Board declined to comment on the charges however the website of Ecole Hillcrest shows Boere is on leave from her teaching duties.

Marriott hopeful province will end funding cut to rural communities

Heather Wright
The Independent

Enniskillen Mayor Kevin Marriott is hopeful the era of provincial cuts to rural grants is over. Marriott was one of hundreds of municipal politicians at the Rural Ontario Municipal Association conference this weekend. One of the big subjects on Marriott's mind - and many other municipal politicians - is the province's cuts to a grant which was designed to replace the Farm Tax Credit. For the past five years, the Liberal and then Conservative governments have been cutting $50 million from the $500 million Ontario Municipal Partnership grant.

Municipalities in rural Lambton have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars over the years, and many had to increase taxes to make up for the lost revenue. In 2018, the provincial Conservatives promised rural leaders they would stop the downward spiral but when it was time to give out the grants in both 2019 and for 2020, municipal governments found themselves on the short end of the stick again. In Dawn-Euphoria for example, $58,000 was lost. That's equivalent to a two per cent tax increase. Marriott - who was critical of the last round of funding cuts - left the ROMA meeting optimistic. Finance Minister Rod Phillips told the group the province is committed to OMPF grants worth $500 million in 2021. "Municipalities told us how vital the OMPF is to their communities and they need information sooner to plan their budgets," say Phillips. "That's why we announced allocations for 2020 earlier than ever before, and why we're committing today to maintain the funding envelope for next year." Phillips added the province will be consulting with municipalities on how to change the focus of the grant to help small, northern and rural municipalities better. Marriott is pleased the government will be "looking at rural concerns about the funding formula."

And he says local politicians may be able to have direct input to the finance minister. "Monte McNaughton (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex MPP and the Minister of Labour) says the minister of finance will be in our area in March and he's trying to get a meeting with him for some of the municipal politicians who have had concerns about the cuts," says Marriott. "They're committed to looking at those concerns." Marriott adds while the funding cuts have been driving up local tax rates, the province would not have to spend a lot of money to improve the grants. "$100 million across rural and norther municipalities would probably shut people up," he says. "Really, that's less than that one per cent wage increase (above the provincially mandated one per cent increase) the teachers want...The government wastes more than that." He adds even though there have already been cuts by the Ford government, a change now is welcome.

Lambton needs won't slip during leadership bid says MP Gladu

Heather Wright
The Independent

Marilyn Gladu is gaining national attention in her bid to be the next leader of the Conservative Party of Canada. But the Sarnia-Lambton MP says her leadership bid won't stop her from representing her constituents. Gladu has represented Sarnia-Lambton since 2015 and has held various positions in the Conservative's shadow cabinet. She's known on Parliament Hill as someone who works with other parties to get things done, including the passage of her private members bill on access to palliative care. Gladu handily defeated her opponents in the 2019 election with 49.1 per cent of the votes. When Leader Andrew Scheer announced he would be stepping aside in December, Gladu stepped up. "Conservatives need to win the next election. To do that, we need to expand the base. And to do that, we need a better balance of fiscal responsibility and social compassion. Canadians care about having a good economy with job creation and lower taxes, but they are also looking for a credible plan for climate change and the environment, support for our struggling Health care system and compassion for people like seniors who can't afford to live, veterans who are homeless, and people who can't afford their medications," she said in a news release. "We can't win on the same playbook that we've had in the last two elections." Gladu tells The Independent she considered how a leadership bid would affect her work in Sarnia-Lambton saying when she becomes leader she would have a larger staff to help take care of local concerns. Gladu has assembled her campaign team which is headed by Georganne Burke who has deep roots in the Conservative Party. She's worked for Tim Hudek and Jason Kenny in the past. She started out in the 2019 campaign with PPC Leader Maxime Bernier and then flipped to Scheer's campaign. The Conservatives will hold a leadership race in Toronto in June. Former Conservative Leader Peter McKay is the only other declared candidate.

More snow fence protects Lambton roads

Heather Wright
The Independent

Lambton County is investing in more snow fences to control drifting on local roads. Jason Cole, the manager of infrastructure and development says Lambton bought about 1,900 m of snow fencing this year to add to the 4,000 meters already in stock. "The county uses snow fence installations on our roads to help reduce or control areas that are prone to snow drifts and improve ongoing winter maintenance response," he says. This year, drivers will notice fencing in three places along Oil Heritage Road' at Courtright Line, at Aberfeldy Line and near Rutherford. There is also snow fencing on Inwood Road near Courtright Line. The county also uses living snow fences, partnering with local farmers to leave several rows of corn stalks in place to act as a snow fence. Some of the living snow fence is on Nauvoo Road north of Rokeby. Cole says the county has also begun planting tree rows on public and private property to help cut down on the drifting. During the first snow of 2020, the fencing seemed to be working. Snowplows could be seen going down Oil Heritage Road near Aberfeldy with their blades up in the area protected by snow fencing.

Transport plan looks at better rail service

The Independent

The province is looking at ways to improve transportation in southwestern Ontario and it could include more rail service. Friday, Sarnia-Lambton MPP Bob Bailey joined four cabinet ministers in London to unveil the southwestern Ontario draft transportation plan. Transport Minister Caroline Mulroney touted the province's investments in intercommunity bus service between Strathroy and Sarnia as ways the province is improving transport links. She also talked about the province's hope to increase rail service. In the Connecting the Southwest document, the province says it will continue "positive discussions with freight rail companies and regional stakeholders toward passenger rail service enhancements and the achievement of two-way, all-day GO passenger rail service between Kitchener and Toronto, which will help connect southwestern Ontario travellers with other regions." The plan also says the province wants to "explore opportunities to increase passenger rail service to southwestern Ontario, working with freight partners on track access and with VIA Rail on the potential for integrated service offerings with GO Transit. These services could increase options and convenience for passengers travelling between London and Toronto." And it suggests the province is looking at changing the speeds of existing trains to get passengers to their destinations quicker, however there is no mention of a high speed rail service which was touted by the Liberal government.

Cannabis concerns grow in Lambton County

Heather Wright
The Independent

Plympton-Wyoming is going to take a look at what it can do to protect residents from some of the adverse affects - especially smell - of cannabis production.

At the Jan. 9 meeting, councillors asked staff to take a look at the approaches other municipalities are taking when a cannabis operation comes to town.

“We have nothing in place now,” says Planner Sarah Baldwin, “and I have been talking with the county about bring bylaws forward but there has been no direction from the province on it...Municipalities are trying to tread carefully on it because it is a federal issue.”

Some municipalities, says Baldwin, have put in interim control bylaws to stop development until some rules are in place.

Councillor Tim Wilkins asked staff to come back with a report on what might be done.

Councillor Netty McEwen agreed. “If we don’t want the stinking factories in her, I think we should do something.”

Lambton County politicians are also concerned about the issue.

On Jan. 15, a committee of council agreed there should be minimum distance standards for cannabis operations, similar to livestock operations.

“This is an emerging issue across the province. It’s a wise thing to do. We have all sorts of minimum standards in planning...to keep all standards the same across the province,” says Sarnia Mayor Mike Bradley.

County council will look at the issue at the Feb. 5 meeting.

Oversized load costs up $5 million

Heather Wright
The Independent

Concern is mounting about the rising cost of the Over-sized Load Corridor.

In a report to council, Jason Cole, general manager of infrastructure and development, says the cost estimate for the project which makes it easier to move large modular equipment from local fabricators to the Sarnia Harbour to ship around the world, has jumped from $12 million to $17 million.

That means Lambton County’s share of the project will increase from $1.2 million to $2.7 million.

Sarnia Mayor Mike Bradley is concerned the costs will rise further when work begins on improving Sarnia Harbour.

He says that could put Sarnia council in a real bind.

Cole suggested a number of things could be done to keep costs down including upgrading bridges on the route later and delay one leg of the route which serves only one fabricator.

Lambton County council will look at the issue again when the first contract for the work is ready to be approved.

St. Clair brine use on roads questioned

A St. Clair Township man is worried about the amount of brine going onto the roads.

Owen Anthony brought pictures to St. Clair Township Council Jan. 6 which showed the liquid salt running into the storm sewers.

Brine is used before bad weather to keep ice from forming on the roads. Anthony says most municipalities apply a small amount of brine in fine lines, often only on bridges.

Anthony is concerned what the salt is doing to the environment since storm water returns to local rivers. He added when he questioned staff about the application, they didn’t seem to know how much was being applied.

Council asked staff to bring a report back on the issue for the meeting in February.

Editorial

Growing cannabis concerns

Municipal politicians, many of whom jumped on the cannabis bandwagon when it rolled into town, are becoming wary of the possibilities of the operations moving into rural areas.

When the federal government hurriedly brought recreational marijuana use into the main stream, many politicians were more concerned what a storefront operation would mean to their downtown. As it turns out, that’s may be the least of the problems.

As we’ve seen in Enniskillen, the federal government failed to think about what impact a growing operation might have on its rural neighbours. There have been concerns about excess light, extra traffic but mostly strong odours coming from the Lasalle Line greenhouse. Try as they might, and High Park Farms has installed equipment to mute the smell, the smell still wafts through the air - a minor annoyance to someone in Petrolia, but a major problem for those next door.

Recently both Plympton-Wyoming politicians and Lambton County councillors voiced the need for some form of regulations, particularly when it comes to odour.

Plympton-Wyoming is going to figure out what it can do with its own planning guidelines to make sure any operation setting up shop has tight controls. And they hope to have the rules in place before a cannabis operation comes to town.

County councillors are interested in seeing minimum distance setbacks, like livestock farming. It is an idea being promoted by Enniskillen council.

But while this sound simple and reasonable, it doesn’t seem like it will happen very easily. As we reported last week, the provincial agriculture minister in a letter to Enniskillen council, says it has no plans at this time to regulate the cannabis growing industry.

But the calls to do something are growing. Enniskillen joined a group of municipalities who host cannabis operations this weekend. They hope to share best practices and give the government advice. Municipal politicians hear about the problems from the people next to the cannabis producers and they know something has to be done for the good of their communities.

Our Story

FROM THE DAVE BURWELL POST CARD COLLECTION

A lovely garden at Robert Stockdale's home greeted people coming to Canada from the United States at Courtright. It seems unlikely today that the "Collector of Customs" would have such a picturesque place to work.

Wishing for a taste of a Newfoundland winter

Canadians like to talk about the weather - ‘Geez, we’re going to get a big snowstorm eh?’ I’m one of those people who can talk about the weather at the check-out.

This winter had been different. For months, we stared at a brown landscape around us, punctuated with the occasional puddle and then torrential downpour.

It did not seem like winter.

So, when I heard the east coast was about to get walloped, I admit, I was a bit envious.

I watched as reporters braved the winds on Newfoundland’s coast the night before the blizzard wrapped up in a hurricane arrived and went to sleep in my cozy bed wondering if the storm predicted for us would actually materialize this time.

When I woke, the world outside my window was white. I couldn’t help but smile.

By the time I was frying the bacon for breakfast, the rain had started and the smile slipped away from my face. The snow would melt away and we’d be left with brown again, I thought.

So, I went back to the Internet and watched in wonder as picture after picture of Newfoundlands record-breaking snowstorm moved across my screen.

There were drifts as high as a house, a time lapse of a car being covered in snow, doors opening to giant walls of snow and of course some crafty Newfoundlanders making a cooler for their beer there.

We went to bed wondering what it would be like to have that much snow - what would you do with it all.

By Sunday, we had a small taste of Newfoundland’s snow. Of course around here, it’s enough to close schools.

In Newfoundland - with nearly a meter of snow and gale force winds - women are driving themselves to the hospital on a snowmobile while in labour. We could use a Newfoundland winter to toughen us up.

And it might help us learn some survival skills. If nothing else, it would give me something to talk about at the checkout.

Plympton-Wyoming swallows 38.75 per cent insurance jump

Heather Wright
The Independent

Plympton-Wyoming Councillor Tim Wilkins is worried about the rising cost of insurance and he says the town should ask the province for help. At the Jan. 9 meeting councillors heard Plympton-Wyoming's 2020 insurance bill surged 38.75 per cent. That's an increase of over $106,000, even after the town increased its deductible and took a second look at the value of the properties insured to get the best deal. Treasurer Norma Roddick-Preece says municipalities across the province are facing on average a 25 per cent increase. In Lambton, communities are seeing insurance rates climb at least 20 per cent. Roddick-Preece says the town's history of insurance claims is a big factor. In the last five years, three fire trucks were written off. There was also a fire at the Mandaumin Library. The town accepted the proposal for a 38.75 per cent increase because there are few options for municipalities. Wilkins says small businesses are also facing rising insurance premiums. He says the snow removal and landscape business recently had a meeting to talk about the rising costs due mostly to legal claims. He says the province is considering what it can do, including changing legislation to help municipalities with rising rates. Wilkins suggested councillors should read the proposed legislation and then enlist the local MPPs help to keep insurance costs down.

Petrolia investigates cost of BIA and minimum building standards

Heather Wright
The Independent

Petrolia council is going to take a closer look at how owners of vacant buildings can be forced to get them ready to rent. Recently, town staff outlined a number of ideas which would enforce a minimum maintenance standard for buildings, give grants to people who want to improve their buildings and a way to put a Business Improvement Association for the downtown. They were ideas floated by administration in 2017 but were never acted on. Councillor Don Welton walked the downtown streets with town staff to get a better understanding of the issue. The former building inspector believes something needs to be done and he's asked council to look at the potential costs of set up standards and the BIA. The report is expected in early 2020.

OPP stops driver doing 170 km/h on the 402 in Plympton-Wyoming

A Mississauga man is facing racing charges after Lambton OPP clocked a vehicle going 170 km/h on the 402 in Plympton Wyoming. A 22 year-old man was stopped Jan. 18 and charged with racing. His drivers licence was suspended for seven days and the vehicle was towed and impounded for seven days. If he's found guilty of racing, the man will face a fine of at least $2,000 and up to six months in jail.

Honouring a giant in agriculture: McNeil in Hall of Fame

Heather Wright
The Independent

The Lambton Federation of Agriculture is honouring a giant in agriculture. At the LFA's annual meeting Friday, the late Leonard McNeil - who was instantly recognizable because he was so tall and outgoing - was inducted into the Agricultural Hall of Fame. McNeil, who died suddenly in 2002, was a politician, an auctioneer and a farmer. And he was part of almost every group you could imagine. McNeil devoted a lot of time to the community as part of the Lambton Plowman's Association, Lambton Cattleman's Association, Lambton Soil and Crop Association, the Masonic Lodge, he was a bass drum player with the Petrolia Highland Band, he was a councillor of Brooke Township and became Brooke-Alvinston's first mayor. He also served as Lambton County's warden. His daughter, Barbara recalls there was very few evenings her dad was not out working in the community.

It was his time as the chair of the 1991 International Plowing Match in Lambton County which he was admired for Friday. McNeil's wife, Margaret, says he led a group of people for nearly a decade trying to secure the event which drew thousands of people to Lambton. Then, when the bid was successful, he and the group went to work - all volunteering five years of the time - to make the event happen. It was McNeil's idea that the profits from the plowing match would be turned into scholarships. The plowing match was very profitable and the scholarship fund flourished. Over 100 students have received about $150,000 in scholarships over the years. The honour was overwhelming for McNeil's family. "I don't know what to say except this is a great honour for our family," Margaret said she accepted the plaque. Margaret told The Independent McNeil was a natural at community events, talking to everyone and enjoying being in the middle of the action. "It was easy for him to express himself," she says. "He loved to give back to the community, he was a very social person," added Barbara. It was something he learned from his mother, who was also active in the community. But what would McNeil think of the honour. "He probably would ask 'Why me?' He would think there should be others ahead of him. He was just living life and it came naturally to him."

Methamphetamine and knife seized in Wyoming

A traffic stop in Wyoming led to the seizure of drugs and a knife. OPP were called to Broadway St. Jan. 19 after someone spotted a disqualified driver behind the wheel. Around 4 pm, police found the vehicle and made the stop.

They found a bag of methamphetamine and a knife inside. The driver also didn't have an insurance card for the car. 40 year-old Michael Dennis has been charged with two counts of driving while prohibited, two counts of failing to comply with bail hearings, possession of methamphetamine, operating a vehicle without insurance, two counts of driving while under suspension and using an unauthorized licence plate. He was held in custody for a bail hearing.

MID ICE COLLISION

There was a collision at mid-ice as LCCVI fell to 2-2-1 on the Lambton Kent girls hockey season bowing 2-1 to Northern on home ice last week. J. Jackson had the lone goal for the Lancers. LCCVI closes our the regular season against St. Pat's at Greenwood on Feb. 13. Game time is 3 pm. Northern Lambton will bring the curtain down on its regular season at Clearwater Arena on Feb. 10 vs. Northern at 2:30. The Lady Eagles fell to 0-5 with loss to Northern and St. Pat's last week.

Radars best Squires in Clinton

The hometown Clinton Radars scored five times in the first period and went to a 10-4 win over the Petrolia Squires in Clinton. Ryan Fraser had a goal and two assists for the Squires. Kole and Kyler Keating and Ethan Dupont also scored for Petrolia. Ex-Squire Brad Burton had three assists for Clinton. The home team outshot the Squires, 56-28 with Petrolia dressing only nine skaters for the contest. Petrolia finished the regular season with a mark of 6-16. The Squires will compete in the “A” playoffs, but will not know a first round opponent until the rest of the teams complete their regular schedule by early next month. Petrolia can not place any higher than 12th place, but could finish lower. If they retain their 12th place position, the team says the first home game of the playoffs will likely be Feb. 7.

Squire Alumni suit up for 50th anniversary

Some familiar faces are returning to the Greenwood Recreation Centre to help the Petrolia Squires celebrate 50 years of hockey. On Jan. 31, the Squires are hosting 30 alumni during Allan Cup Night. The regular squad – on a break until playoffs begin – will take on an Alumni team. Some of the familiar faces taking to the ice include, Steve Barraclough, Brad Hull, Todd Bidner, Jeff Gould, Scott Hull, Brayden Belan, Mike Gardner, Scott Mcphail, as well as goalies Chris Houle and Kevin Luckhurst. There will be displays of the Allan Cup and Squire history. There will be some 50th anniversary jerseys available in a silent auction and there will be memorabilia to purchase as well. The puck drops at 8 pm.

Flyers clinch playoff berth with weekend win

Jakob Knowles turned aside 17 shots to lead the Petrolia Flyers to a 2-0 win at Wallaceburg officially clinching a PJHL playoff spot for the Flyers, Dresden and Blenheim and eliminating the Thunderhawks from postseason competition. Eric Marsh and Zach Bressette scored for Petrolia against the Hawks. Marsh and Michael Vanek had two goals each last Thursday as the Flyers doubled Blenheim, 6-3 at Greenwood.

The Flyers are now 12-19-3 on the season and continue to battle with the Blades and Junior Kings for positions six through eight in the Stobbs Division standings. It's the fourth straight season the Flyers have qualified for the postseason in Petrolia and the 11th season in a row dating back to when the squad was based in Alvinston. Petrolia at home to Essex Thursday at 7:30. They visit the Admirals in Amherstburg Sunday.

Peer scores in Legionnaire's loss to St. Thomas

Oil City's Carson Peer notched his fourth goal of the season in the Sarnia Legionnaires' 4-3 loss to St. Thomas in the Greater Ontario Junior Hockey League. The 16-year old rookie now has ten points in 37 games this season. Sarnia has lost five straight contests and is only five points up on St. Thomas for the final playoff spot in the Western Conference. The Legionnaires are at home to St. Marys Thursday before taking on the Rockets in Strathroy Saturday. Petrolia minor hockey grad Bayly Fryfogle had three assists last week for the Rockets in a 6-1 triumph over Komoka. Fryfogle has eight assists in his last six games.
